

Marked improvement has been made in the courses of legal instruction as offered and arranged by the professors in the Law School of New-York University. There are now enrolled in the Law School 227 students; 96 in the senior class, 100 in the junior class, and 31 in the post-graduate course. Of the above number, 132 students have obtained the degree of B. S. or B. A. from some literary college. There are seven women attending the lectures of the Law School.

The post-graduate course in law will embrace four divisions: "Early Law," by Prof. Isaac F. Russell, J. C. D.; "Corporations," by the Dean, Dr. Austin Abbott; "Advanced Constitutional Law," by Prof. Christopher G. Tiedeman, and "Preparation for Trial" by Dr. Austin Abbott.

Emily Kempin, LL. D., of the University of Zurich will soon resume her lectures on Roman jurisprudence to a class of women. Dr. Kempin is a thorough scholar and a pleasing speaker; she is backed in her efforts by the Woman's Legal Society of this city.

The two legal societies of Delta Chi and Phi Delta Phi have established quiz classes and private moot courts.

The medical department of the New-York University is doing true university work, in that the students and professors, working together, are accomplishing much in the line of original research.

J. M. Byron, M. D., has recently invented an incubator for the cultivation of disease germs. Much attention is being paid to this most important branch of medical research. Particularly interesting experiments are now being conducted on the germs of leprosy.

A number of fine microscopes have been imported, and excellent work is being accomplished in the line of mounting and preserving.

Special classes have been formed in vivisection. It should be remembered that the New-York University Medical College was a pioneer in the movements favoring both dissection and vivisection.

Special activity has been displayed in the undergraduate circles of the university.

The following dates have been arranged for the football team: Oct. 14, Stevens Institute, at Hoboken; Oct. 17, Berkeley Athletic Club, at Berkeley, Cal.; Oct. 24, Montclair Club, at Montclair; Oct. 27, New-York Athletic Club, at Polo Grounds; Nov. 7, Rutgers College, at New-Brunswick.

The middle class of the Theological Seminary has elected officers as follows: Allen B. MacNeill, President; John M. Thomas, Vice President, and J. M. Plateur, Secretary and Treasurer.

The work in the School of Pedagogy will embrace the following courses: Educational psychology, educational classics, history of education, applied pedagogy, and methodology. Applied pedagogy, among other topics, will treat of manual training, aesthetics, language, school government, school law, school construction, kindergarten, and school health and hygiene.